Dear Oliver,

How are you? I'm fine in China. I'm going to tell you something about my life here. I study in Shanghai. I live near the school. So I can go to school on foot. But I often come by bike. I think it's fun and that's good exercise, too. My father works in a library here. I often read books in the library on Saturday afternoon. I have a new friend here. His name is Li Lei. He is in Beijing now. I'm going to visit him next weekend. Beijing is a big city. There are many interesting places there. I will fly there. We are going to visit the Great Wall and the Palace Museum. They are old and great. What are you going to do next weekend?

Yours,

Jack

阅读短文，判断 5 个句子是否正确，正确写“T”，错误写“F”。

Different countries have different traffic punishments(交通处罚), and some of them are very interesting. In Germany, if(如果) the driver breaks the traffic rules, he has to walk back home. In Indonesia, if the driver breaks the traffic rules, he will get a fine(罚款) first. Then he must cut his hair. In Colombia, if the driver breaks the traffic rules, he has to see lots of movies about traffic accidents(事故). In the USA, the driver will be a nurse if he breaks the traffic rules. He has to look after the wounded in the hospital. In Brazil, the driver will go to the school to play games with children. Anyway, wherever we go(无论去哪里), we need to follow the traffic rules of this country.

1. The underlined word "break" means "违反" in Chinese.
2. The driver has to cut his hair if he breaks the traffic rules in Indonesia.
3. In Colombia, the driver has to see funny movies if he breaks the traffic rules.
4. If a driver breaks the traffic rules, he has to be a doctor in New York.
5. The writer writes this passage to tell us to follow the traffic rules.
